We will present on the topic of the structure of state legislative, judicial and agency interaction dealing with water issues. The presentation will include a discussion of stakeholder involvement, and the practical and logistical necessity of stakeholder involvement during the legislative, judicial and agency processes. Stakeholders may be trade associations or groups that represent land owners, insurers, farmers, mining companies, environmental or other “public interest” groups impacted by decisions to be made by government bodies to regulate, approve – or disapprove – license, land use, extraction, permit or other applications.
